

Biography: Niquole Esters recently completed the Geopolitics, Territory & Security Masters program at King's College London. Before that she worked at Conservation International for 3 years as a research associate in the organization's Regional Marine Strategies department. She received her BA from Washington and Lee University in 2004, double majoring in Geology and Politics. Niquole's research interests include the development and implementation of international maritime policy and law, comparative national maritime policies, and the role of international organizations in the establishment of maritime policy and law.